Shifting into winter gear

Cold, rain, snow forecast in Chicago this week

Chicago Tribune

Ready or not, winter is on its way back. Thanksgiving is weeks away, but below-freezing temperatures and, yes, snow are forecast this week.

If there is a bright spot, the mid-November appearance of the cold and snow does not necessarily mean the Chicago area will be in for a repeat of last year's memorable winter—though forecasting upcoming winters can be particularly challenging because there are no strong, reliable predictive indicators.

"Just because we had a cold winter last year doesn't doom us to have another severe winter," said Jim Angel, Illinois' state climatologist. "There is no strong signal that when you have cold early on it sets the tone for the season."

A tropical typhoon may be to blame for the blast of cold on the horizon.

Super Typhoon Nuri, which has been churning the Pacific Ocean with winds of 180 mph, is expected to kick a couple of dents in the jet stream. And that will bring arctic air rushing into the area early in the week, with highs below freezing in some places and lows in the teens. Measurable snow is a good bet too.

"Temperatures like that would be normal for mid- to late December," said Ricky Castro, a meteorologist with the National Weather Service.

The chain of events—or as the weather service calls it, "a fascinating and somewhat unusual evolution"—begins over the Bering Sea off Alaska. That's where the remnants of Nuri are expected to start buckling the jet stream. That should send warmer air toward the polar region and plunging arctic air over Canada and into the Midwest.

The jet stream actually will bend in two places, Castro said, over Alaska and over the Chicago area. How far down the jet stream dips will determine how cold and snowy it will be around here.

The weather system technically will be affected by a piece of the polar vortex, a term that became popular last winter. But meteorologists emphasized the polar vortex happens every winter and last year its presence was simply felt more than usual in the area. The influence of the polar vortex, even this early, is completely normal, the National Weather Service said.

There could be "accumulating snow" north of the cold system but Castro said it is too early to tell where and how much. A good cover of snow could make it even colder, he said. Strong gusty winds will make temperatures already projected to top out in the 30s and perhaps dip into teens feel even colder.

The cold will stay for pretty much the whole week or, as the weather service puts it, "leaving our region in the icy grips of an early season cold snap."

Winter 2013 started ahead of schedule in northern Illinois, with unseasonably cold temperatures and snow. It was a steady and formidable visitor until spring. That does not mean this year will follow the same timeline, or match its intensity, however.

Angel examined data for the winters following the state's 20 coldest winters—December 2013 to February 2014 was ninth-coldest—and found that half of the following winters were colder than average and the other half were average or warmer.

Angel said the forecast for this winter follows suit with equal chances of above- and below-normal temperatures.

"We don't see any strong indications of it being too warm or too cold," Angel said.

For those feeling particularly hopeful, there is a chance this winter could be milder than normal. Meteorologists have been watching for the possible development of an El Nino weather system in the Pacific, which can reverse the direction of Pacific trade winds and pull warm water to the surface. El Ninos in the Pacific can moderate winters in Chicago.

Angel said the possible El Nino has been slow in developing and "is the wild card in all of this."

"If that starts up, that helps us out somewhat on the forecast for a little bit milder winter," Angel said.

The long-term forecast may be uncertain, but this week it's clear: Have the coat and mittens ready.

Polar vortex almost everywhere
The coldest air of the season is set to reach into 42 states this week as an arctic blast drops temperatures from the Canadian border down to the Gulf of Mexico, forecasters said. The cold snap will affect 200 million people, with only Florida, Hawaii and the Southwest being spared, according to accuweather.com forecasters.

Will Maddon lead Cubs to World Series—or not?

The Second City
NETWORK

Scott Goldstein

Netwk

Joe Maddon might be “dripping in analytics,” but Cubs fans are drenched with anticipation for the upcoming season. The era of the lovable loser is waning, and the Cubs finally have found the right man to shepherd the flock to the promised land of October glory.

However having hope is at the center of being a Chicago sports fan ... but then again, so is getting used to failure. I’m sorry, Rick Renteria, you seem like a legitimately nice guy, but that contract of yours should provide for a really nice vacation.

Not all of his jokes landed at the press conference, but Maddon is relaxed, smart and, most importantly, he’s a winner. WE’RE GOING TO THE WORLD SERIES! It’s a lock. A sure thing. Inevitable just like death and taxes.

Of course, we’ve been burned before. Dusty Baker and Lou Piniella said all the right things on day one, as well. This is different, though. Right? It feels different. It has to be different. Here are three reasons that Joe Maddon is taking us to the World Series. For sure.

1. He has never referred to the “Billy Goat Curse.”

I hate when people talk about the curse. It’s not real.

2. He’s a man of the people.

Half Italian plus half Polish equals the perfect mix for Chicago. Any dude with a 45-foot Winnebago nicknamed “Cousin Eddie” is comfortable in his own skin. He eschews the gated communities and lifestyle of the suburbs and prefers to be downtown where the action is. The man doesn’t need a tie. Heck, he doesn’t even need to button his jersey all the way up. He said, “Don’t ever permit the pressure to exceed the pleasure,” which is basically like saying, “Hey! It’s 5 o’clock somewhere,” and then ordered a round of shots and beers for a press conference.

He just out Chicago-ed Chicago.

Not even Ditka’s smooth enough for that move.

3. The time has come.

A gambler is never due, and you could flip a coin 100 times and it could come up heads 100 times. But by next year, that coin will be flipped for the 107th time ... and it has to come up tails sometime.

But it’s been a rough road. I mean, even Ditka would have a hard time winning the World Series. Last year, I learned from my defense of Jay Cutler’s signing that it’s best to hedge your bets, so here are three reasons pointing against the Cubs winning the World Series with Joe Maddon at the helm.

1. He used the word “synergy.”

I hate when people use that word. It isn’t real.

2. Wrigley Field might overwhelm him.

Even though the bleachers now lie in ruin, Wrigley is a special place, and Maddon gets that. During his press conference, he recalled a “magical” moment he had as manager of the Rays when he had to “shut up and appreciate the moment.”

If you’ve ever seen a video of lab animals seeing the sunshine for the very first time and discovering the world outside of the laboratories they’re trapped in, then you’ve probably shed a tear or three.

This is what Maddon is going through right now—emerging from a depressing dome better fit for a tractor pull than for America’s national pastime. We need to be concerned that the introduction to sunshine could take a serious toll on him.

3. He might succumb to the temptations of the big city.

Late bar hours and drunken tourists can start to get to you. Hopefully Maddon can find himself a nice, quiet place in the penthouse of the Ritz-Carlton for $10.85 million, or, if he’s really looking for “Joe Sixpack” accommodations, there’s a condo at the Waldorf going for $3.9 million. He can also join a number of athletes in the Trump Tower if he wants to keep it down in the $2.5 million range.

Really, there are dozens of high rises downtown with every possible amenity available, like swimming pools, first-class gyms and doormen controlling who comes in and who stays out. An egalitarian paradise far, far removed from the exclusionary and luxury laden lifestyle of the suburbs.

And, alas ... we come to one final bonus reason:

4. They are still the Cubs.

Urban gondolas for Chicago?

Residents float ideas for Museum Campus transit

By Tracy Swartz | REDEYE

Imagine zooming through the sky from Union Station, past Buckingham Fountain with stops at the Field Museum and Adler Planetarium in a vessel that resembles an amusement park ride before ending your trip at McCormick Place.

The so-called "urban gondola"—a cable car typically associated with ski lifts—would travel on overhead cables between downtown hotspots and the Museum Campus.

The "urban gondola" is among 70-plus ideas—from better signs on Lake Shore Drive to streetcars in the South Loop—the Metropolitan Planning Council received on how to better improve transportation around Museum Campus, the area along Chicago's lakefront that is home to Soldier Field, Northerly Island, Adler Planetarium and other museums.

Thursday was the last day for the public to submit ideas, and no idea—no matter how outlandish it may seem—is being ruled out.

"We are absolutely going to consider every suggestion," said MarySue Barrett, Metropolitan Planning Council president. "We're not just looking at very near-term items. We're looking at an aspirational level."

The council, a group of community leaders devoted to city development, will begin to review the suggestions with the Chicago Department of Transportation and Chicago Park District to develop recommendations for next steps, said Yonah Freemark, a Metropolitan Planning Council project manager.

In August, Mayor Emanuel announced the creation of the Museum Campus task force to study transit options to and from the area, which serves nearly 4 million visitors each year, according to the city.

The Lucas Museum of Narrative Art is slated to be built in Soldier Field parking lots. The planned museum is expected to bring more visitors to an area that can seem isolated because it is blocks from a CTA rail station and is served by a few CTA bus routes.

The task force solicited ideas by hosting public meetings and accepting online submissions through civicartworks.com. Some residents at a public meeting told RedEye that it's difficult to figure out where CTA buses stop at Museum Campus, and bicycling can be difficult because of pedestrian congestion.

Besides the urban gondola, other ideas include a light rail on Lake Shore Drive and streetcars that would connect the South Loop and Museum Campus.

How to read a jobs report

By Megan CrepeauREDEYE

On the first Friday of every month, the country's financial elite wake up early and breathlessly await the federal Bureau of Labor Statistics' monthly Employment Situation Summary—or, as you probably know it, the jobs report.

"It's the best single collection of data that we get that tells us about what's happening in the job market," bankrate.com Washington bureau chief Mark Hamrick said.

The report seems simple, but if you want to understand what its numbers mean for the economy, you're going to need some context.

The unemployment rate usually gets the most press every month after the jobs report is released, but that number doesn't account for every jobless person. The BLS defines "unemployed" as a jobless person who is actively searching for employment. When the October jobs report noted that unemployment is down to 5.8 percent, that was a good sign—but it doesn't quite paint a full picture.

First off, the national number won't necessarily reflect the situation where you live.

"Our economy is incredibly complex and made up of a lot of different small or large economies that are distinct from each other," said Josh Wright of Economic Modeling Specialists International. "All economics is local. We try to hammer on that."

In Illinois, the unemployment rate in September was 6.6 percent, according to preliminary numbers from the BLS. In Chicago, it was even higher: 7.3 percent.

And the unemployment rate excludes people who would like a job but are not actively looking for one. The report covers those people under different terminology: Jobless people who had not looked for work in the past four weeks but had looked for work in the past year are considered "marginally attached" to the labor force. Within that group, there are the "discouraged workers"—jobless people who have given up looking for work altogether.

"The unemployment rate can go down, but the question is, did the unemployment rate go down because people found jobs or because they gave up looking for jobs?" asked Ted Dabrowski, vice president of policy at the Illinois Policy Institute.

The BLS also counts those who have had to settle for part-time work because they couldn't find a full-time gig or because their hours were cut back. They're employed, sure—but not as employed as they'd like to be.

And it's hard to talk about jobs without talking about wages. The jobs report tracks the average hourly wage for private-sector nonfarm workers; over the year, that number has gone up only slightly, according to October numbers.

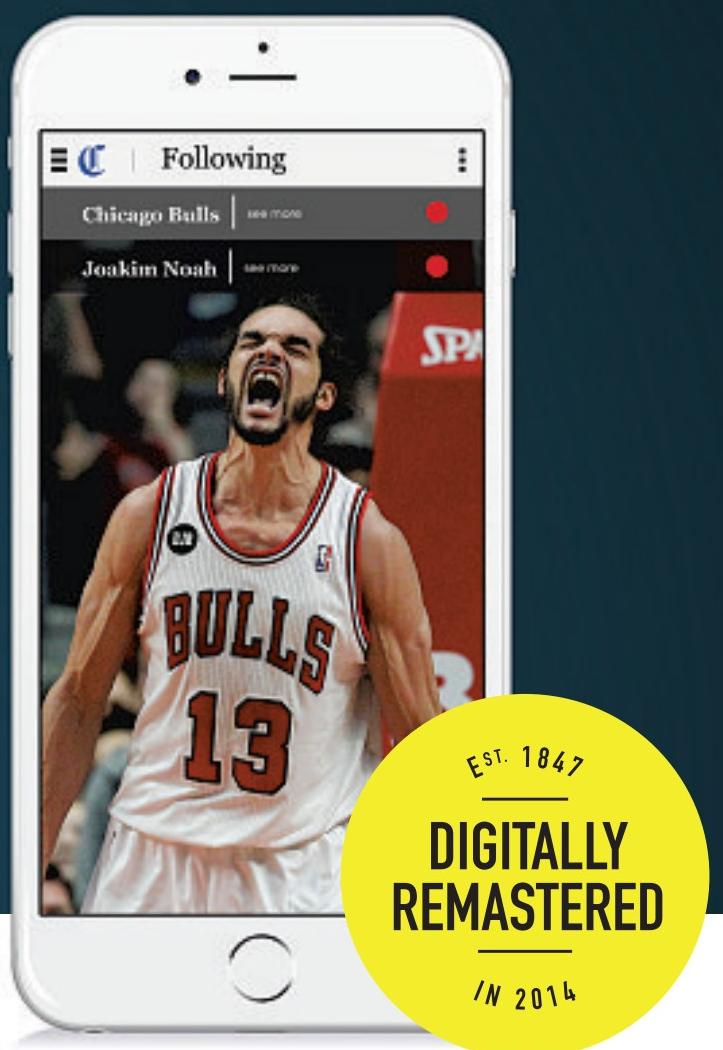

And perhaps the most important thing to remember is that the jobs report is not set in stone. The reports are subject to revision as more accurate data become available—for example, at the end of October's report, the BLS notes that August and September jobs numbers initially were underreported.

"[The jobs report is] inherently going to be all about speed," Wright said. "Data takes a long time to collect, and the monthly jobs report is trying to do it as quickly as possible."

Officials hope new HealthCare.gov avoids 2013 flaws

Officials planned to unveil an improved health care insurance website Sunday they hope will allow the second enrollment period under President Obama's health reform plan to avoid the technical meltdown that plagued its launch last year.

The reconfigured healthcare.gov was to go live Sunday night before a three-month open enrollment period that begins Saturday, during which existing policyholders can change coverage.

Administration officials said Sunday they will get it right this time, with a website that will make it easier to shop for coverage, and enough computing capacity, call-center help and other resources to handle re-enrollment of all current policyholders.

"We are strongly encouraging our customers to return to healthcare.gov. ... Shop and compare. The majority will be able to save money," particularly those who may have overlooked available federal tax credits last year, said Kevin Counihan, chief executive officer of the federal health insurance marketplace.

New features were added last month, and more will be available by Monday. The enrollment period begins Saturday and lasts until Feb. 15.

"Border of Lights" balloons are released into the sky Sunday at Potsdamer Platz square in Berlin. The installation of 7,000 illuminated helium balloons traced the course of the Berlin Wall, which once snaked through the city separating communist East Berlin from West Berlin. Over the weekend more than a million Germans and people from around the world celebrated the 25th anniversary of the 1989 fall of the wall, the event that more than any other marked the end of the Cold War. EPA PHOTO

Still feeling chronic pain from your injury or surgery?

Anyone can have chronic pain.

Sometimes surgery, an injury, or an accident can result in chronic nerve pain. Nerve pain is often described as a shooting, burning or stabbing sensation. Some of the incidents that can result in this type of nerve pain include:

- Injuries • Surgeries • Accidents • Falls • Burns

Our clinic is conducting a clinical research study to examine the safety and effectiveness of an investigational medication in reducing chronic nerve pain when compared with placebo (inactive substance).

2 Americans imprisoned by North Korea return to U.S.

Americans Kenneth Bae and Matthew Todd Miller, who had been doing hard labor for months in North Korea, stepped off a plane at Joint Base Lewis-McChord near Tacoma, Wash., and into the welcoming arms of family Saturday after the surprise involvement of the top-ranking U.S. intelligence official who traveled to Pyongyang to bring them home.

Obama defends plan to act on immigration

President Obama defended his plan to use executive powers to implement some immigration reforms, saying in an interview broadcast Sunday on CBS he had waited long enough for Congress to act. Obama told congressional leaders on Friday he would try to ease some restrictions on undocumented immigrants.

Mexican president fed up with protests

Mexican President Enrique Pena Nieto on Sunday condemned violent protests over the apparent massacre of 43 students after demonstrators set fire to the door of his ceremonial palace in Mexico City on Saturday night.

MAKE IT STOP

Bears fans just want to know this is as bad as it gets this year

By Chris Sosa | REDEYE

Feeling good about the Bears this season has been no easy task.

For every one-handed grab Brandon Marshall makes, Jay Cutler turns the ball over. For every dominating performance Willie Young or Kyle Fuller has, someone else struggles mightily. Hence the 3-5 record coming out of the bye week and heading into Lambeau Field for Sunday's showdown with Green Bay.

Other Chicago sports have done their best to provide distractions. The Bulls and Blackhawks are off to halfway decent starts, the Cubs have a new manager and the White Sox

NFC NORTH	W	L	GB
Detroit	7	2	—
Green Bay	6	3	1
Minnesota	4	5	3
BEARS	3	6	4

are raking in awards. They also give us a different way of examining what went down in the Bears-Packers game.

We took the key plays and categorized them as:

» Derrick Rose's ankles: Too painful to talk about.

» Joel Quenneville's scowl: Puts you in a sour mood.

» Joe Maddon's RV: You're happy when it shows up.

» Jose Abreu's bat: Capable of carrying the team.

CHSOSA@TRIBUNE.COM @REDEYESPORTSCHI

FIRST QUARTER

Maddon's RV: After missing the past three games, Lance Briggs takes down Eddie Lacy for no gain on the Packers' second play. Yeah, the Bears need a lot more of that.

1 Rose's ankles: Brandon Bostick catches a touchdown pass from Aaron Rodgers on fourth-and-goal from the 1. This speaks for itself.

2 Rose's ankles: Micah Hyde picks off Jay Cutler on the Bears' second drive as he tries to hit Martellus Bennett. Here we go.

Quenneville's scowl: First Cutler gets sacked, then Bears lineman Jermon Bushrod gets a penalty for smacking Julius Peppers in the helmet. Like that's going to do any good.

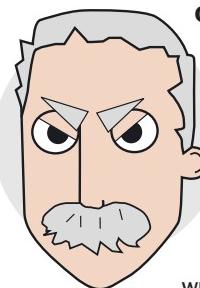

Score:
Packers 14, Bears 0

SECOND QUARTER

3 Rose's ankles: Just when it looks like the Bears might force a Packers punt ... Jordy Nelson is wide open and catches a 73-yard touchdown pass.

Rose's ankles: For the second straight drive, Rodgers hits Nelson for an easy TD, this time from 40 yards.

Quenneville's scowl: Down 28-0, the Bears go for it on fourth-and-goal. Cutler almost throws an INT. Later, the Bears go for it on fourth-and-10 ... and Cutler gets sacked. Sounds about right.

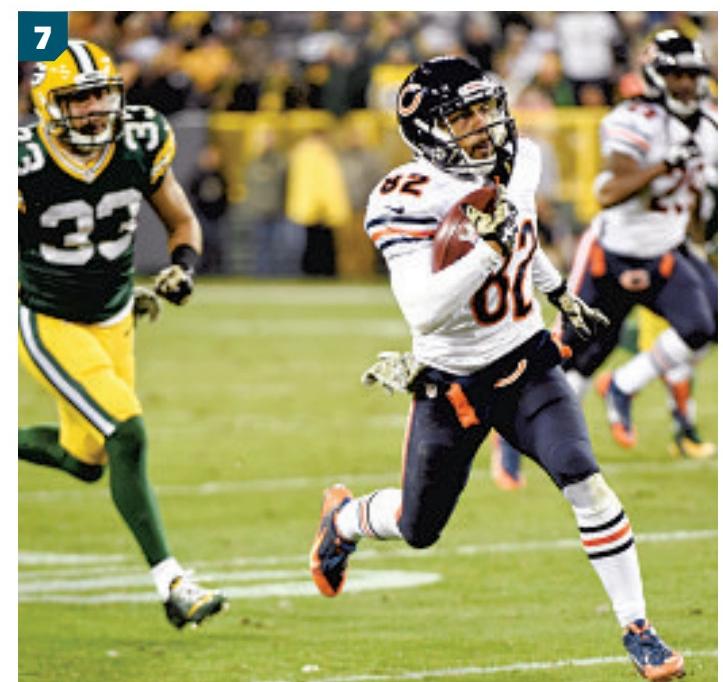

Quenneville's scowl: Bears guard Jordan Mills leaves the game with a rib injury. Bears fans would ask what else could go wrong, but they know better by now.

4 Abreu's bat: OK, time to give Rodgers his due. He threw for 315 yards and six touchdowns in one half. One. Half. Maybe someday the Bears will have a quarterback like that. Maybe.

Score: Packers 42, Bears 0

SECOND HALF

OK, as much as we would have liked to continue our theme for this game, it just feels futile. (The Bears did finally score, which might be good news for your fantasy team.)

So instead, here are our favorite Bears-related tweets from the second half, in no particular order.

“The #Bears' 42 points allowed in the first half is a new high, breaking the long-standing record of the Patriots' 38 points on 10/26/2014.
—@adamjahns

5 “Who's excited for Jimmy Clausen and Matt Flynn? Coming soon to a TV near you!” —@thefootballgirl

6 “No mustache on Trestman. No mustache. On Trestman. That is all.” —@CoachQsmustache

“NBC sound effects dept. reconsidering policy of not playing slipping-on-banana-peel slide whistle noise when team screws up. #bears”
—@MattPais

Ok now I am starting to laugh. Wow.” —@PatrickMannelly

“I'm Rob Lowe. I coach the Packers.” “I'm super creepy Rob Lowe. I coach the Bears.” —@richardroeper

“THE PACKERS BLOCKED THE PUNT BY KICKING IT BEFORE THE PUNTER COULD” —@SBNation

“I'll tell you what, man...Jay Cutler could spike the football & it would be one of his 3 most accurate passes tonight.” - Gruden voice”
—@FrankCaliendo

“New Years Eve alone #ThingsMore FunThanThisBearsSeason”
—@ReallyLaLa1

“OFFICIAL PETITION: Name Otter 681 #Bears head coach.” —@swasko

7 “#Bears tied NFL record for most kickoff returns in a game. Couple more scores for the Pack and the Bears can put that out of reach. Ugh” —@mullyhanley

“Bears game vs Vikings has been flexed to Fox Sports 4 at 3am”
—@PaulMBanks

“Ref Craig Wrolstad just added a second to the game clock. Surely he will be downgraded for this, no?”
—@BradBiggs

FINAL: Packers 55, Bears 14

BEARS BRAIN TEASER

This week we put an imaginary wager in place. The Bears and the Packers agree to host a party for the winning team at their own stadium and agree to pay the cost of the rentals.

How much cash would the Bears have to fork over to rent out Soldier Field's colonnades for a Packers party, and how much would the Pack owe to host a Bears victory party in their atrium? We'll assume the party happens on a weekend during the season.

Answer: Based on each stadium's price list for rentals, the Packers would pay $8,500 for rental of their atrium, and the Bears would pay the $5,000 asking price for rental of the colonnades.

THANKS TO ALL WHO ENTERED, AND LOOK FOR A NEW CHALLENGE THIS WEEK!

1	What's the first thing Bears fans should do when they wake up on Monday?	Pray to Grabowski and thank him for Ditka, Payton and sausage from Callahan Meats. Bearzzz.	Drinking lots of water should help with that hangover.	Buy Bulls tickets.	Schedule an appointment with a psychiatrist.	Get the walk of shame brought on by the booze and sadness of the night before over with?
2	Grade the new Lupe Fiasco/ Fall Out Boy Bulls tribute song remix.	Solid D. If they could say "Only the Bulls" 72 more times, I'd bump it up to a solid D+.	It helped get that Taylor Swift song out of my head, so I give it an 'A.'	Love Lupe, but he can't make up for the Fall Out fail.	D. I literally laughed out loud when I heard it. I thought it was a parody of some kind.	It's the only rap song with a Bob Love reference, so 15/10.
3	A badminton player failing a doping test is like a sumo wrestler ordering a Diet Coke with his 42-ounce T-bone.	... another sign of the corruption in pro badminton. STOP IGNORING IT, ESPN!	... like Antonio Cromartie using Viagra—performance-enhancing drugs seem unnecessary.	... like a chess player getting a date. It's ridiculously bizarre.	I'm sorry, they drug test badminton players? What's next? PED testing for the chess club?
4	How do you explain the Bulls' improvement on offense?	Pau. Pau. Pau.	The (Jimmy) Butler did it.	The offense just needed a little boom, boom, PAU!	Pau Gasol.	Having a power forward who can actually shoot helps! (Looking at you, Carlos Boozer)
5	How much would you pay for a pristine Michael Jordan rookie card?	For the greatest player that's ever played the game? Not much. For us who saw him play live, the memories are priceless.	"I'd buy that for a dollar!" (Tweet me if you get the reference.)	We talking money or limbs? Would you accept an arm and two pinky toes?	Eh, having one doesn't really do anything for me. I was more of a Shawn "Reignman" Kemp fan.	About as much as I would pay to see him wear clothes that actually fit: millions.

DePaul soccer rewriting records

DePaul women's soccer continued to make individual and program history Sunday. In beating Georgetown 2-0 at Jamaica, N.Y., on goals by Elise Wyatt and Amber Paul, the seventh-ranked Blue Demons:

- » Added their first Big East tournament title to the first regular-season conference title they had won nine days earlier
- » Earned an automatic bid to the NCAA tournament, giving them back-to-back NCAA appearances for the first time in the program's 19-year history

- » Saw Schaumburg's Alexa Ben, the Big East freshman of the year, set a DePaul season record with her 11th assist
- » Improved to 16-0-4, remaining one of two unbeaten teams in the country (along with UCLA)

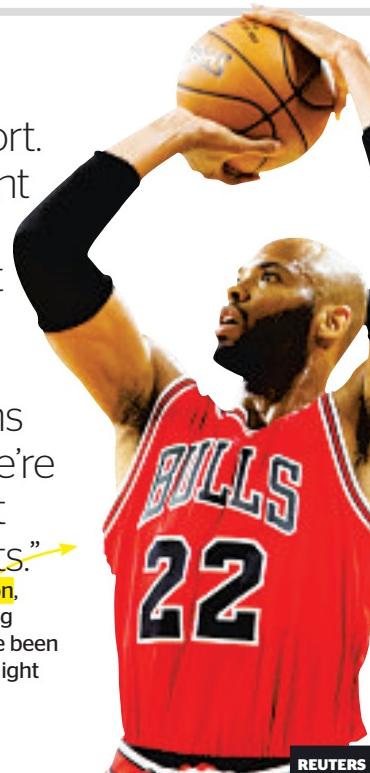

Ray Rice decision on horizon

It won't be much longer before a decision is rendered in the appeal of indefinitely suspended former Baltimore running back Ray Rice. The third-party arbitrator who presided over the hearing that concluded last Thursday has informed lawyers to file their briefs by this Thursday with a decision expected to be handed down no later than 10 days afterward, according to sources with knowledge of the case.

THE MOUTHWATCH

"It's about effort. We could point fingers, but we're not that kind of team. At the day it counts as wins and losses, we're not looking at individual stats."

—Bulls forward Taj Gibson, on the team's rebounding struggles. The Bulls have been outrebounded in six straight games.

Jessie Ware brings her ‘Tough Love’ to America

Los Angeles Times

Jessie Ware is exhausted. A few weeks back the 30-year-old English R&B singer was amid a promotional tour for her recently released sophomore effort, “Tough Love,” and though she fought off a few yawns and is feeling jet-lagged from the flight to the West Coast, it otherwise doesn’t show.

For her new album, Ware took the sultry, electronic-soul that drove her 2012 debut, “Devotion”—which earned critical acclaim on both sides of the Atlantic—and gave it a bolder edge with the help of new collaborators like Miguel, Ed Sheeran and Benny Blanco, who has produced big hits for Katy Perry, Maroon 5 and Britney Spears.

You sound more confident on “Tough Love.” What triggered that?

I knew myself a bit better. I was completely in control of the first record, but a bit of experience helped me. Some of the people I worked with wanted to test me and see how far they could push me. That’s why I love collaborating. There’s a tension. You don’t always disagree or you completely agree and it’s magic, but in that tension everyone has a valid point.

Miguel, Ed Sheeran, Devonte Hynes and Benny Blanco had a hand in half the album, which may surprise listeners. How did that happen?

Through my friend Ben Ash [better known as artist-producer Two Inch Punch], they worked together when they were really young before Benny was “Benny Blanco.” I met him a few years ago, and I was like, who is this cocky guy? He could come across very intimidating on paper, but I felt really at ease with him and that’s to his credit. When it got to the point of starting to write for this record, I went and tried two weeks with them in New York. ... I knew Benny didn’t want to make the music he was well known for, but I definitely think he helped guide me to create maybe more direct pop.

How did you keep the album sounding like you while working with new producers?

It’s my voice. I don’t think I’ve changed my style ... but I’ve shown more of my voice. There’s a lot more people that I worked with on this record. But I was more decisive and I knew what I thought, and hoped, my audience wanted from me after interacting with them for two years. This is an album I wanted to stand up for a long time. I wanted it to be something you can put in your car. I made a lot of it in L.A. so there is sunshine and optimism. I wanted it to feel vibrant but also not to impose itself too much.

Do you feel that maybe there’s still something to prove to listeners?

I feel like there’s a real affinity with my American fans. ... I loved it when I toured the States and they’d be like, “Sing it, girl!” It gave me the confidence to push it a bit further on this record. ... Even the first show in San Francisco, immediately with “Champagne Kisses” they got it. They are punching their fists in the air—it’s what I wanted.

ALBUM REVIEW

Sonic Highways
Foo Fighters

By Ernest Wilkins

REDEYE SOUND BOARD

As beloved genre torchbearer Dave Grohl toes the line of being "a guy who just loves rock 'n' roll, man," no one bats an eye to the fact that his band hasn't made an interesting song in years. Foo Fighters didn't challenge themselves on 2011's "Wasting Light," as if there was no reason for the veteran group to try anything new when you can be swaddled forever by people who still worship at the altar of Nirvana.

To their credit, the Foos change things up on "Sonic Highways," which is essentially brought to you by the number 8. The 8-track album is the group's eighth studio release and was partially recorded in eight of the biggest music cities in America (Austin, Chicago, Los Angeles, Nashville, New Orleans, New York, Seattle, and Washington, D.C.). Each song features a prominent musician from the city in which it was made (including Cheap Trick's Rick Nielsen in Chicago, Gary Clark Jr. in Austin and Ben Gibbard in Seattle) and was recorded in iconic studios like New York's Magic Shop (Sonic Youth, David Bowie, The Ramones) and Steve Albini's Electric Audio in Chicago. In addition, the band shot an HBO documentary series chronicling the process. Cool, right? Well, kudos to the band for attempting something refreshing. But anyone seeking an iconic look at American music through a Dave Grohl lens will be disappointed, as the gimmick ends up shining more than the music it produced. That's partly because on "Highways" Grohl continues a career-long streak of spotty lyrics. Yes, he mentions icons appropriate to each involved city (Muddy Waters on the recorded-in-Chicago "Something from Nothing"; the historic intersection of 14th and U streets in the D.C.-focused "The Feast and the Famine"). He then undoes that goodwill by lobbing corny lines like, "I've been throwing knives to see just where they land, now my world is in your hands." Ugh.

The band shreds like no other but only in the interest of repeating former glory, save for the aforementioned "The Feast and the Famine," which to my recollection is the first time the Foos have attempted anything resembling social commentary. All the concept of the an- themic, middling "Sonic Highways" required was a celebration of American rock, connected to its origins. What the album delivers is the equivalent of one of those fantasy camps where middle-management types pay to shred with legends. You decide who here comes off as the icon and who sounds like the Average Working Man hanging out.

Pais

"Glen Campbell: I'll Be Me" made me ashamed to only know the titular country singer as the guy behind "Rhinestone Cowboy." Because:

» He recorded with Frank Sinatra, Elvis and the Beach Boys.

» After Campbell performed at the 2012 Grammys, during which he received a Lifetime Achievement Award, Paul McCartney went backstage to tell the artist how much he loved him.

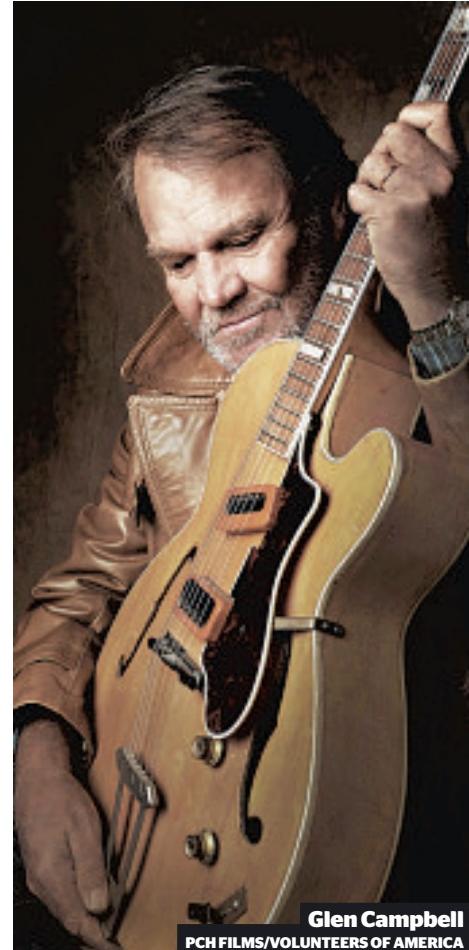

» Campbell has the respect and admiration of Bruce Springsteen, the Edge, Brad Paisley, Keith Urban, Blake Shelton, the Red Hot Chili Peppers' Chad Smith and many more.

» He hosted a TV show ("The Glen Campbell Goodtime Hour") for which Steve Martin was a writer.

Fortunately, director James Keach's documentary isn't a glossy celebration of the now-78-year-old music legend. The film focuses on Campbell's 2011-12 farewell tour, during which he played more than 150 shows while battling Alzheimer's disease. In September 2011, Campbell performs on "The Tonight Show," and Keach is smart enough to include the full performance. Many of Campbell's family members—he plays with three of his kids, and fourth wife Kim factors heavily in the film—fear he won't be able to do it, and there's suspense in watching a five-time Grammy winner and highly influential artist attempt to deliver on the level he has for decades.

The song goes off without a hitch, as long as you don't include a sleazy comment Jay Leno makes after the show about Campbell's daughter, Ashley.

As the tour progresses, so does Campbell's illness, and it's a sign of compassion, not pity, the way audiences support him through less-than-perfect shows. It's fascinating to see how he remembers the music even if he forgets the words. "I'll Be Me" doesn't do a great job of exploring its subject's life, particularly neglecting an examination of his painful past. (Kim mentions an alcohol problem, her husband's attempt to dull the pain of failed marriages and guilt for not being there more for his kids.) The sensitive discussion of Alzheimer's and the need for awareness and funding focuses too strongly on celeb commentary, while excluding Seth Rogen and his wife, Lauren Miller, who have been active in raising money and exposure.

But the sad, inspiring film establishes the legacy of an artist who reinforces that stars, too, can face terrible afflictions, and usually all anyone can do with someone fighting such a disease is watch, hope and help in any way possible. Try not to get choked up as Ashley sings, "Daddy, don't you worry; I'll do the remembering."

HOROSCOPE

BY RICK LEVINE | READ MORE AT TAROT.COM

Scorpio Oct. 24-Nov. 21

Instead of driving home your point, change your tactics to get along with your peers.

Appreciating the contributions makes it easier to discover a solid solution.

Sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21

The hectic pace of your day can wear you out. However, reacting quickly isn't as useful as you think, you could waste a lot of energy heading in a wrong direction. Taking the time to set priorities makes a big difference.

Capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19

Misreading the dynamics on the job can send you on an exhausting wild goose chase. Even if your plan is unsuccessful, try not to blame anyone else. Taking the pressure off of others makes the best of a stressful situation.

Aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18

Conversing about your personal life might not go as smoothly as you prefer. Instead of obsessing over your feelings, find common ground. Collaborating with like-minded people can help you to accomplish a lot more.

Pisces Feb. 19-March 20

Time appears to be running faster than ever, yet your wisest strategy now is to take deep breaths and slow down. An unexpected change of plans could be upsetting at first, hold on to your dreams for the best possible outcome.

Aries March 21-April 19

Your drive for pleasure could make you feel unproductive. You might be content with letting dreams pass you by, but it's your window of opportunity is closing fast. Make your work counts while the odds are still in your favor.

Libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22

A simple financial decision may escalate into a crisis that involves a close friend or business partner. Executing a strategy based on cooperation, rather than control, might be enough to restore the peace.

Taurus April 20-May 20

You Bulls prefer to be sure about your direction, but you'll tolerate more uncertainty now. You have a thirst for excitement, but you can rely on your inner compass to guide you through the day.

Gemini May 21-June 21

Everything feels less complicated than it actually is today, but you may not notice the emotional subtleties beneath the surface. Thankfully, you're able to successfully balance yourself in the tricky cosmic currents.

Cancer June 22-July 22

Your friends may be annoying you by coaxing you out of your comfort zone. Even if you resist, the moon convinces you to relinquish control. Accept that you can't prevent the inevitable, your worries can become exhilaration.

Leo July 23-Aug. 22

You want to squeeze every last drop out of your busy schedule, but circumstances will require you to change your plans. Thankfully, your tension may be alleviated by discussing your dilemma. Don't let pride stand in the way.

Virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22

Someone may be keeping information from you, leaving you to make a commitment based on incomplete data. If your strategy falters, save the day by focusing on the amazing possibilities that still lay ahead.

Libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22

A simple financial decision may escalate into a crisis that involves a close friend or business partner. Executing a strategy based on cooperation, rather than control, might be enough to restore the peace.

TODAY IN THE YEAR ...

1954: The Iwo Jima Memorial, inspired by the famous Associated Press photograph of the raising of the American flag on Mount Suribachi during World War II, was dedicated by President Dwight Eisenhower in Arlington, Va.

1969: The children's educational program "Sesame Street" made its debut on PBS.

1989: Workers began punching a hole in the Berlin Wall, a day after East Germany abolished its border restrictions.

Cavill soars over Loop for filming

'Batman v Superman' flies through Chicago

One couldn't help but feel like they were seeing something they weren't supposed to see on the set of "Batman v Superman: Dawn of Justice" on Friday night in the Loop.

Superman (Henry Cavill) took flight over Clark Street, hovering high above ground before descending and then floating toward love interest Lois Lane (Amy Adams). It was easy to spot Superman thanks to his classic blue and red threads and, you know, the fact that he was flying.

Security didn't go to great lengths to block onlookers from getting a glimpse of Superman in costume, as was the case when "Man of Steel" filmed in Plano in 2011.

And unlike last week's "Batman v Superman" shoot in the Yorkville area—where the public wasn't allowed to stop and watch scenes set in a cemetery and at Superman alter ego Clark Kent's Smallville farm home—onlookers could watch Friday's shoot from just a block away.

The stunt was pulled off with help from a harness and wires. Cavill made the whole thing look effortless, but according to Michael Shannon, who played villain General Zod in "Man of Steel," the stunt is anything but.

"The only time in the movie I got in a harness was when I learned to fly," Shannon said Saturday as he co-hosted a fundraiser for A Red Orchid Theatre, which he co-founded in 1993, at The Underground. "It was very difficult work. It was very physically demanding. You can't just sit in the harness and expect it to do all the work. You're not going to look like you're flying. You have to pay attention to what your feet and legs are doing. It's like dancing. But I had a blast making that movie. I love [director] Zack Snyder—great guy. I love Henry Cavill."

Coincidentally, Cavill stopped by the Underground on Saturday and joined Shannon for a "Man of Steel" reunion (Shannon claimed he had no idea "Batman v Superman" was filming in Chicago at the moment).

The Snyder-directed sequel is scheduled to hit theaters March 25, 2016, and features classic DC Comics characters Lex Luthor (Jesse Eisenberg), Wonder Woman (Gal Gadot) and Alfred Pennyworth (Jeremy Irons).

Is Shannon disappointed he's not (presumably) a part of the crowded sequel? "I'm not disappointed—no," he said. "I think for someone in my position to be disappointed about something would be foolish."

"Batman v Superman" filmed Thursday inside the Washington Blue Line stop, which was made to look like the Metro stations in Washington, D.C.

Filming is scheduled to continue in the Chicago area through Friday, with helicopter aerial filming expected near Navy Pier on Monday between 11 a.m. and 5 p.m.

KING ME

There's no need to ask Michael Shannon whether he likes film or the theater more. The Oscar-nominated actor will tell you he prefers theater without being prompted—no wavering, no politically correct answer—even though he realizes most others prefer film. He also realizes that it's because of film that more people came to see him do theater last year in A Red Orchid Theatre's "Simpatico."

"When I started doing plays at A Red Orchid, we were lucky if anybody came to see them," he said. "Because of some things I've done, people are now curious. A lot of people want to come. It's ironic to me. I always thought the theater is more interesting than most of the films I've done. But I do know people have a fascination with the camera. They can't get enough of it."

HOME ALIVE

No need to splash your face with aftershave and scream in the mirror in a towel, people. Despite a death hoax that circled the Web on Saturday, Macaulay Culkin is, in fact, alive. The "Home Alone" star took to Instagram this weekend to lay the rumors to rest. People reports, posting shots of himself and his Pizza Underground bandmates hanging out, joking around, drinking soda—you know, things living people do.

THE QUOTE

"Oh, I've seen it many times before ['Gone Girl.'])"

—Matt Damon joking to paparazzi about BFF and future Batman Ben Affleck's, err, batjunk, which made a very small cameo in the recent thriller, the Huffington Post reports. Prompted by Affleck at the same event, Damon also confirmed he will be reprising his role as Jason Bourne in the series' fifth installment, due out in 2016.

'You can't handle this live!'

"The Sound of Music Live!" earned NBC nearly 22 million viewers and the network is hoping the upcoming live production of "Peter Pan" will soar its way into even more living rooms, but are American audiences ready for a live military courtroom drama? Variety is reporting NBC is in talks to take Aaron Sorkin's song-free 1992 film, "A Few Good Men," which was originally a play, to the live TV stage as well, though details are still being ironed out. Carrie Underwood will be playing Jack Nicholson's part, right?

THE DIGIT

A recent starting bid for a set of American Girl dolls Samantha and Molly, on eBay. The historically-based '90s girl favorites—which, let's be honest, were ridiculously pricey to begin with—are apparently raking in big bucks online these days, according to Buzzfeed, especially original discontinued characters like Felicity and Samantha. Psshh, like we'd ever part with Felicity.
